Posts Tagged 'speed' Following another meeting between team chiefs and team drivers, tomorrow morning's "unofficial" press conference is likely to be followed by a vote to either agree or deny for a change to the F1 regulations. Should the vote go in favour of changing the rules, as expected, then the following changes are likely to be introduced: This slideshow requires JavaScript. However, if the vote goes against changing the rules, the status quo will continue. There is also a possibility that Toro Rosso will be entering the season as an independent team with the intention of joining the F1 grid in 2010 with a power car. It is believed they will use Williams' Judd V6 power unit for 2010, but will be in the entry list (in a race entry capacity) with the intention of switching to the Renault engine for the 2011 season. The team itself is believed to be exploring the possibility of reviving Felipe Massa's career with them. This slideshow requires JavaScript. The SMP Racing team also have V6 power cars and will not be participating in the 2010 season. The only team to be completely new in 2009 is Coloni, and the team are unlikely to be running in 2010. As always, we would recommend you check back here tomorrow morning
