Book Science Helps for Kids, Cheerleaders For Teens, and Help for the Young At.Q: Excel VBA - Findout which column is responsible for formula I have the following formula in cell N36: =IF(I35>I30,I35-I30,0) It seems that the formula was used by dragging the formula down, so I have to cut it off. I would like to know in which column the formula came from, and which row it is on. I have tried to use FIND but this only returns the number of the column, not the row. Thanks A: If you have Excel 2013 then use the Pivot Table Wizard. Open the Pivot Table wizard and set the destination cell to be the "First Row" value. This will copy the value from the end of the formula to the first row, and not include the actual formula. Then highlight all the rows and do Data->PivotTable, and it will report the actual row count. EXAMPLE: The formula in A3 is: =SUM(A2:A12) This returns the result 8. The Pivot Table that results is: The formula is set to the first row of the "First Row" value. The result is the first row. If you highlight the rows, it will tell you 8 rows are highlighted. Data->PivotTable reports 8 rows are selected. All the rows were selected for the Pivot Table, and the pivot results of 8 rows will report. WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump is stepping up his attacks on the Justice Department and FBI, just one day after his attorneys went to court to argue he cannot be charged with obstruction of justice, even if he fired James Comey as FBI director. The tweet did not specifically accuse Comey or the FBI of misconduct. But it set up an aggressive theme for the weekend and Tuesday: The president is going to continue publicly attacking law enforcement while in office and get away with it

Body of a bull shark - that has the dead grey-white colouration of an ordinary shark - washed up on a beach in Western Australia, but it was actually a venomous python that died of tetanus. The body of the 58-kilogram bull shark washed up on the Paraburdoo beach near Ceduna on January 29. It may sound like the corpse of a shark, but in fact it was that of a snake. It was at the beach, paddocks and homes of the local indigenous community, who treated it with respect. 'Blue-white' colouration is characteristic of sharks, but that shade of grey is actually the result of a skin infection caused by bacteria that affects the jaws of the shark. It shows the end of a shark's life - death by shark attack. When the fish dies, the belly slowly turns grey, and if the water is still it can take a full two weeks for the dead skin to sink to the bottom. Attacks by sharks account for more than 800 deaths a year worldwide, although Australia is thought to have the fewest encounters. Bull sharks - long, slender and fast - are not a threat to humans, but a small bite from a white pointer or a dusky shark could be fatal. Only 30 people have died from shark bites in Australia since 1900. 7.00pm AEDT, Friday 29 January 2011 Brisbane Times

President Obama is warning Republicans that their refusal to bring up their immigration bill is putting the country's security at risk. In an interview with Univision's Jorge Ramos that aired Thursday, Obama warned that the slowdown in legislation on issues such as border security and illegal immigration will get in the way of a full solution to both. "This is a piece of legislation that could get done"
