At present, more and more remote working arrangements are being implemented in global firms. However, there is still significant resistance to remote work. There are a number of different reasons for this resistance; firstly many people are 'wired in' to the office environment and it is difficult to change this and accept that being remote may be an acceptable alternative. But secondly the issues of job security are also a concern for many people. If I work for a global firm is my job secure where I am geographically based? If I am remote how will my employer know if I am meeting my targets? The large part of this job security issue is, of course, related to the economics of the global firm. Workers based in a number of foreign countries are making a difference to the economy and this is a good thing. However if people have the same lifestyle in different countries they may wonder whether their personal choice is worth it. And of course it is to some extent to do with different cultures and different expectations.

The game is about a young man who buys a space suit, and tries to make it to the planet Saturn by himself, having no idea what to expect. As he ascends the body of the space suit, he's ripped away from the Earth's gravity and into the light of another world, where he finds a parasite in space. This parasite "breathes" particles of matter, and can control them. It decides to turn the young man into a fortress for its own need, while leaving the rest of the planet in a desolate state, for it needs the planet's land mass to give it its energy. When the player is in control of the space suit, the game can be played with the keyboard, and features the "DJ-kast" which can be played by itself with a pause button. This makes the game playable with one hand, since both have their own functions. This is my first completed musical fighting alongside the Korean resistance against the Soviet Union and with the military of the United States in the United States-Korean War. U.S. civil authorities actively supported the anti-Soviet Korean government, adopting a policy of including Korea in U.S. Cold War strategy. When Truman demobilized the U.S. occupation army from Korea on 31 December 1945, the United States began an unofficial state of "Yam-Pyong", establishing a naval blockade along the 38th parallel, to support an antifascist war against the Soviet Union. This policy soon became known as the First United Nations Temporary Commission on Korea (UNTCK) and continued to expand its mandate into an international treaty in mid-1946. From June to November 1946, the UNTCK, led by U.S. Navy Commodore Robert B. Anderson until replaced by U.S. Army Major General John R. Hodge, oversaw the Formosa, Beijing and Shanghai Development Railways carried over 250,000 Chinese communists from northern China across the Yellow Sea to the Korean resistance in Hwanghae-gang and Busan. From the end of 1946 to May 1949, the United States used the UNTCK as a propaganda tool to support Korean resistance to the Soviet Union, helped establish the Provisional Government of South Korea (PGSK) led by Syngman Rhee during the First Republic of Korea (1948-1949). The US had agreed to provide aid to the Republic of Korea in order to kick start the government established by Syngman Rhee. The U.N. had to react to this in kind when Kim Il-sung and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea

(DPRK) set in motion the backing of the People's Army of North Korea (PAN) on January 27, 1948, which stepped up its support for Democratic People's Republic of Korea guerrilla fighters. This in turn triggered the Korean War with the United States, USSR and North Korea on June 25, 1950. In the aftermath of World War II, Korea moved from the periphery of world politics to the center of Cold War politics. The ideological battle was fought between the Soviet Union and the United States, the result of which was that Korea became caught up in the Cold War struggle for the control of East Asia. Post

When a state changes its priorities, it is natural for people to ask: Which way is the right direction? In what way can we make society better? As a creative mind, I have been asking myself these questions for over 20 years. At this year's RSC conference in Oxford, I took a break from my creative process and allowed myself to dig up hidden treasures from the past. So far, I have

This research has changed my whole way of thinking, because the information in those books was taken as absolute truths at the time. I realized that in the process of learning a new way of thinking, I lost the ability to be satisfied with the old way of thinking. But, the journey is complete, and I can get back to my creative pursuits. Finally, I have found my way back to the things I love the most. My creative process is now reinforced with a set of values.
