- Windows Key Features.Q: How to get value of checked input element? I have a simple form for a radio button pair. I want to send data to the server based on the value of the checked radio button. I would like to send "on" or "off" along with it, but cannot figure out how to do this. I cannot use the name attribute as the values are dynamic. I have tried the following:

$("#radios
```

input[type='radio']").change(function(){ var checkbox = $(this).is('checked'); $('inp ut[type="text"]').val(checkbox.is('checked'
)); });
```

```
this: $("#radios
```

```
input[type='radio']").change(function(){
var checkbox = $(this).is('checked'); $('inp ut[type="text"]').val(checkbox.attr('value'))
; });
```

"input[type='text']" but use

"input[type='radio']" for input type radio.

$("#radios
input[type='radio']").change(function(){ var checkbox = $(this).is('

If you're not sure what that is, it's basically recorded audio segments, like voiceovers, that play on the video screen of games to clarify the game's narrative for visually impaired players. The Audio Description tool provides "full verbal description of a visual experience using video footage from the game being played," according to Naughty Dog. With it, players can get guidance for a particular character by narrating about what they're seeing in-game. When playing the upcoming Uncharted 4: A Thief's End, Uncharted series creator and franchise director Neil Druckmann says that this may be used to "designate dialogue for specific characters as well as giving voice to ones you're not familiar with," as Kotaku spotted. Whether or not this experimental branch of Audio Description will be integrated into Naughty Dog's next
