Efficacy of aluminum and zinc-containing oral hygiene products on dental plaque and calculus formation in schoolchildren. Oral hygiene products, prepared by using aluminum and zinc salts, are widely used to enhance and improve the oral hygiene of the population. However, their effect on plaque and calculus formation is not clear. The objective of this randomized, double-blind, parallel study was to assess the effect of 8 weeks of regular use of an aluminum and zinc-containing dentifrice (Al/Zn) compared with a zinc-containing dentifrice (Zn) on dental plaque and calculus formation. In total, 60 schoolchildren aged 9 to 12 years, who presented high levels of dental plaque and calculus, were randomly assigned to use either an Al/Zn dentifrice (10.6% aluminum and 2.7% zinc) or a Zn dentifrice (0.1% zinc), which were supplied in a parallel design. The subjects used the dentifrice twice daily for 8 weeks, followed by a washout phase of 4 weeks. Plaque and calculus formation were assessed using the Turesky-Gilmore-Glickman modification of the Quigley and Hein Plaque Index and the Turesky-Gilmore-Glickman modification of the modified Quigley-Hein Plaque Index. The data were analyzed using a random-effects analysis of variance. Mean plaque and calculus scores significantly decreased for both dentifrices. However, there was no significant difference in the percentage reduction of plaque and calculus scores between the Al/Zn and Zn groups. In conclusion, the use of the aluminum and zinc-containing dentifrice provided
