heiress to 'Princess Di' estate LOS ANGELES (Reuters) - A private investigator hired by the late Princess Diana's estate has delivered to a British inquiry into the heir presumptive to the late British royal family a personal video of the princess as a child playing with her older sister, the estate's lawyer said on Friday. The Palace, in a written statement, confirmed that the investigator, Christopher Doudna, who was hired by the estate at the request of the late Princess's eldest son, Prince William, presented two of the video clips to the inquiry into the death of Diana, which began hearings in London on Tuesday. Doudna also gave the inquiry a 37-page report prepared by him on how the video clips were discovered and how they were obtained, along with copies of some of the royalty genealogy files his firm manages. The lawyer, Sue Doughty, who represents the trustees, detailed the findings of the report at the start of the inquest in London. "There is one 16-minute video consisting of 200 to 300 stills. There are three basic scenes," she said,
