Crack. Subliminal Effects of Music in Psychology There's no denying that hearing a piece of music can have an effect on you. It can bring an atmosphere to a party; it can lift your mood; it can be the perfect complement to a wedding or a funeral. But do those effects occur because music is actually doing something to you? We explore the subliminal effect of music in psychology. The Subliminal Effect of Music On a psychological level, there is a mutual influence between music and psychology. Music has an effect on a person's mood; your mood affects your perception of music. Music is also influential in the way a person thinks and the way they process information, as well as memory. If you listen to music while engaging in other activities, such as exercising, studying, or working, you could be altering your thought processes. What it tells you is that in addition to your being affected by music, it may also be affecting you!
