If you're anything like me, you've been putting things off, rushing through your lists (and then, even, some of your lists) - and then finally saying, "I will get to that today!" As of this morning, you've not yet gotten to that one thing. But thanks to the Internet, and the fact that you're probably reading this on a computer or phone or tablet, here it is: this is your 2010 Mid-Year Update. Happy new year. After a wonderfully busy (but long) summer, I was blessed to have a few quiet months, working and enjoying the fruits of the last few months. As we head into a new year, I have my priorities in order: 1. Summer Stuff. I've been working on some crafts for my Etsy shop. And my Web Developer is doing some work on my website, and I've been re-writing some of the older posts on this blog. 2. Craft : Anglerin' for World's Ugliest Anglerfishby Kevn G. Dillard on July 18th, I finally caught a rare blue mullet in a net!!I'm thrilled to show off the fish, and to say that it's a good thing, because it was a very challenging catch. I'm working on a post about my own personal adventure catching this fish, and hope to be done soon. 3. Work. I'm currently working for a small business, and it's been a dream. It's not a big company, but they have some big dreams. They're doing really well, and I'm enjoying the work environment. My site is currently under construction, so I'll be posting with pictures soon. 4. Family. As I mentioned above, I'm currently working for a small company in Washington, DC. This means that I'm living with my parents most of the time, and they've been the best thing for me. My mother has been doing quite well since my dad's stroke two years ago, and she's very active in her church and
