The Environmental Protection Agency will use 10 percent of its staff budget for implementing President Donald Trump's executive order on climate change. The cost-cutting measure, reported by Politico, is considered a victory for the coal industry, which spent $53 million lobbying on the EPA during the Obama administration. That's right: the administration is spending $53 million of taxpayer money to make it harder for the EPA to protect our air and water. According to the Center for Biological Diversity, the EPA has already transferred about $13 million to outside contractors since Trump took office in January. But since the EPA is the single most important government agency in U.S. history for protecting the environment, the move to cut staff by 10 percent, combined with growing uncertainty over the EPA's Trump-appointed leadership, could harm the agency's ability to properly regulate pollution. "That's a big deal," says Lucas Van Zandt, an attorney with the Center for Biological Diversity. "If the agency can't make policy changes and is hamstrung by external factors, that's a problem." But the administration has plans to cut more than 10 percent of the EPA's staffing levels, according to a report from the independent news outlet Inside EPA. The agency's budget grew from $8 billion in 2014 to more than $8.4 billion in 2015 and 2016. Despite the steep reduction in staff, the EPA is still set to collect more than $7 billion in 2017. The Trump administration's agenda will increase the EPA's domestic greenhouse gas emissions, making the move to cut staff retroactive as well as forward looking.
