pdfAcademic achievement, personal involvement, and self-concept as predictors of the college experience. Participants in a study were assessed as freshmen and as sophomores to determine the degree to which ratings of academic achievement, personal involvement, and self-concept (or self-appraisal) were associated with future academic performance and self-esteem. A significant correlation was found between each of these indices and academic performance at the two semesters.
Personal involvement was also correlated with self-esteem, but the correlation was lower. A possible interaction effect with grade point average was found between a hierarchical grading arrangement and academic performance as assessed by overall GPA.Light emitting diodes have gained widespread use as light sources for home, personal, and commercial use. In many of these light sources, it is often desirable to replace the light source with a more efficient light source in order to
