Clinical application of a continuous endoscopic ultrasonography to evaluate intramural bowel motility during functional gastrointestinal disorders. To evaluate the clinical application of a new endoscopic ultrasonography (EUS) device (RIC) to assess intramural bowel motility in patients with functional gastrointestinal disorders (FGID). In our prospective study, 30 patients with FGID and 10 healthy volunteers underwent bowel ultrasonography (BUS) and EUS with RIC. The ultrasonographic images were saved to a computer for analysis (MESO 2001-WM, M2 Medical Inc., Tokyo, Japan). The bowel motility during defecation was analyzed in patients with FGID. The bowel speed in patients with idiopathic defecation disorder (IDD) significantly differed from that in patients with functional constipation (FC) and that in healthy volunteers (P).
