Permethrin promotes a pro-inflammatory cytokine milieu in human salivary gland epithelial cells via activation of the epidermal growth factor receptor. Permethrin (PER) is an insecticide with a high potential to disrupt tissue homeostasis and the immune system. In humans, PER is known to elicit a transient acinar cell injury (ACI), which is attributed to the release of luminal contents. The present study identified PER-induced release of the pro-inflammatory cytokine interleukin (IL)-1β from human salivary gland (HSG) cells in vitro. PER induced IL-1β secretion in HSG cells by activating the epidermal growth factor receptor (EGFR). PER induced phosphorylation of EGFR and its downstream signaling molecules, including mitogen-activated protein kinases (MAPKs), cyclic adenosine monophosphate-response element-binding (CREB), extracellular signal-regulated kinase (ERK) and c-Jun N-terminal kinase (JNK), leading to the production of IL-1β. The PER-induced release of IL-1β was inhibited by chemical inhibitors of EGFR, MAPKs, and CREB phosphorylation. In addition, knockdown of EGFR using small interfering RNA (siRNA) drastically reduced the PER-induced release of IL-1β. These findings suggest that PER induces inflammation via activation of the EGFR-mediated signaling pathway in HS
