According to a poll commissioned by Gallup, which was recently featured in the Washington Post, 61 percent of Americans support the legalization of cannabis, and another 24 percent support “decriminalization” — the removal of marijuana from the federal Schedule 1 list of controlled substances. ADVERTISEMENT Seventy-five percent of Americans said the federal government should not “interfere in decisions about personal drug use by adults,” while 67 percent said that “marijuana should be legalized and regulated like alcohol.” Moreover, only 12 percent of those polled said they support the federal government prosecuting marijuana users. During his State of the Union speech on Tuesday, President Obama mentioned the “wide open spaces” on the west coast, and the need to balance efforts to control a massive influx of undocumented immigrants with the need to crack down on the production of marijuana. “We don’t need to spend billions more on militarizing our southern border,” Obama noted. “We don’t have to keep hiring more border patrol agents and copying the Department of Defense’s failed stopgap military strategy.” The president went on to say that “instead, we should be using those dollars to finally pass a law that lets the Department of Homeland Security’s Office of Intelligence and Analysis start tracking where people are going after they get here,” a reference to the Secure Communities program, which has led to the deportation of an estimated 500,000 immigrants. ADVERTISEMENT The new Gallup survey found that 51 percent of respondents approve of the way Obama handled his recent one-hour address to Congress, while 41 percent disapprove. A majority of Americans — 53 percent — also said Obama was “more honest” than Congress on the issue of immigration, while only 40 percent said he was “less honest.” The Gallup poll surveyed 1,014 adults nationwide on Wednesday and Thursday.
