Africa Times has uncovered yet another story of female genital mutilation (FGM). The 40-year-old woman was mutilated in 2007 at Mkori's village in Nyambo, Pemba, a tourist resort island in the Indian Ocean. Human Rights Watch has stated that this is the first time someone has made a public complaint on the island. The woman's experience was helped in the future by a fellow victim from another village. This is a sad story, and it is one of the very many reasons why people need to speak out. We need to listen to stories of women who have had their rights violated; who are given only a second chance, as this woman was. The UN and the International Labour Organization have vowed to deliver a three-year programme to help women who have suffered genital mutilation. This is the government's response to the Kampala Declaration signed in

1998.Related Events GRAND RAPIDS — A survey of two, 20-year-old entrepreneurs have found that Western Michigan University’s recent foray into the Michigan Venture Capital Association’s Michigan Seed Accelerator competition is resonating within the region. “Kendra Lutes and Chad Taussig struck out to create a new venture and secured financing to support it. They are doing well and were competitive with other regional businesses,” said Mark Zabler, the association’s president. The office manager c6a93da74d
