crack got its name from chemist dr. ronald j. mandico, who created it during a drug research and development program at lonsdale chemical company of newark, new jersey. the name was based on the cookers used to make crack, and "crack" then became a slang term for "rock" or "rocks". mandico's original name for the drug was b-crack (because it was based on the b-isomer of pyridine), but this was eventually given the name "cocaine" or "coke" due to its great resemblance to common recipes for cooking meat for barbecue. mandico declared the drug was nonaddictive and safer than other forms of cocaine (including its b-isomer) crack is still a very popular drug in the united states because of its availability and price. crack dealers (known as "crack whores") will frequently cut the drug with baking soda or other substances which affect the purity of crack, making it more or less potent, and thus more or less valuable. many drug users will prefer crack over cocaine because of the former's high price, making it a "status symbol" drug for the lower class. crack is more easily differentiated from cocaine because it is visibly different. cocaine is yellow, while crack is either white, gray, red or yellow/green. cocaine is usually sniffed through the nose. crack is sniffed through the mouth; the crack will usually leave a bitter taste in the mouth, and if sniffed too much, it will make one's eyes water. crack will also give a feeling of euphoria to some users. reversal is a reaction of an acid and a base to form an ion. this is an example of ph neutralisation, where the balance is returned to that of the two chemicals (the ph value returns to 7). neutralisation is a type of acid-base reaction, and usually involves two strong base elements and one strong acid element.

"research supports the idea that crack use caused more crime and violence," says wozniak, "but it has also caused what i consider to be a high rate of birth defects and other serious health effects." the first few rock-like "crumbs" of crack have a more intense high than the powder form, but after several snorts, users are more likely to start coughing. it is difficult for users to administer more than three snorts at a time, though they may do so without noticing. the airways in one's lungs become more restricted and breathing more difficult as more crack is consumed. according to wozniak, "crack requires greater daily usage than powder cocaine to produce the same effect." for many addicted users, a "crack fix" comes nearly every day, unlike powder cocaine, which is used only once or twice a week. a user may spend a significant portion of each day buying or smoking crack. drugs, cigarettes and drinking are associated with far higher rates of addiction than, for instance, sex or gambling. [35] addiction is more than a struggle with pleasure. it is the inability to experience pleasure without the substance. crack users are often unable to do this; they are compelled to use crack. any problem that could be caused by drinking alcohol is also caused by crack. it damages the lungs. alcohol is used in the manufacture of crack, and the crack that is used often contains traces of it. crack is much more addictive than powder cocaine, and affects a user's judgment and speed of thought more than powder. crack can lead to addiction to other substances such as heroin. because it is taken more often than powder cocaine, users are at greater risk of becoming addicted. it can also affect a user's sex life because it makes it more difficult to become aroused. a user's ability to work may decrease when using crack. users are more likely to have problems in their relationships, and have not only familial problems, but legal problems too. sexually transmitted diseases like aids are more common among crack users. prolonged or heavy crack use is associated with long term effects such as amnesia, which are observed in less than 1% of crack users. 5ec8ef588b
