it is the belief of the instructors of this course that the most critical individual variable that will decide an organization's survival and success is its ability to manage psychological and social challenges as they occur. this course will emphasize both theoretical and practical methods of managing relationships at a professional and personal level. in this course, students will participate in role-playing and simulated-experience activities designed to teach them how to manage the psychological needs of employees, contractors, customers, and vendors as they occur. students will learn specific strategies for identifying and managing situations that may arise in the workplace. they will also learn how to effectively manage psychological challenges resulting from the often stressful demands of work and personal life. students will discuss the core concepts that are presented through discussion, notes, and reading. students will also participate in role-playing exercises to practice behaviors discussed in the course as well as learn to respond to and handle stressful situations that may occur during the course. participants will receive immediate individual and group feedback, which reinforces learning and retention of course content and helps to clarify areas of confusion. with the huge popularity of esports, the world of esports has evolved much faster than most other sports. some commentators have theorized that key factors include the increasing quality of players as well as the growing pressure to succeed and the need to improve performance. however, while we recognize that performance training, among others such as nutrition and sleep, will play an important role in this context, we argue that a growing body of research has shown that the psychological state of the athlete, namely motivation, is pivotal to improved physical performance. 5ec8ef588b
