The sound generators include a counting feature to monitor the total hours of audiosound exposure and compliance over a specified time-period. The counting feature is triggered at the beginning and at the end of the given time period, and resets back to zero as soon as the time period is over. The counting feature can be accessed and set at each study visit by the study audiologist. The sound generators have a programmed pre-set time of use of three hours per day, which may be adjusted as needed. In order to check compliance, the study audiologist will re-visit the study participants at 6-month intervals and check the total number of hours used. If there is more than one study participant at a given visit, the study audiologist will separate the two into different rooms and program the two systems so that they do not interfere with one another. The individual study participants will be given to instructions on how to use the sound generator at the start of the study, and will be instructed to use the sound generator at least 3hours per day. The study participants will be instructed to return the sound generator and to self-report total time of sound therapy use by daily self-monitored diaries. If an individual study participant fails to comply with the sound therapy protocol, the study audiologist will step in to assist the study participant in compliance. Compliance with the sound therapy protocol by the study participant (that is, the success of a given study participant to use the sound generator for more than three hours per day) will be monitored by (a) the study audiologist re-visiting study participants on a monthly basis to check compliance; (b) self-reported diaries of compliance; and (c) continuous monitoring of
