our recent fully electric car campaign, our media team were at a loss. There was simply no vehicle to use to provide the proper juxtaposition of new and old, and no ICE to fall back on as a reference point. The question on everyone's lips was: "What on earth do you plug an electric car into?". The answer? We found a solution. A solution that, at the time, seemed outlandish, but one that put us on the right track for the future. Here we are, some eight weeks later, and we have five answers to our original question: "What do we plug in our next fully electric vehicle?" Now you can read more about the electrification of modern sportscars and how you can get involved in it, right here. Fox News host Greta Van Susteren discussed the need for the U.S. military to drop the euphemism for Islamic terror in order to counter the enemy who is waging a "holy war" against the West. "We've been using phrases like Islamic radicalism," Van Susteren said. "It's the same as if we say 'they worship Satan.' That's a more honest way to put it." Van Susteren was reacting to remarks made by retired Army Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton during an interview for "On the Record." "These people are fighting a holy war, and that holy war has cost us more than $1 trillion, and for what? For a law that says the Muslim has to remain second class," Eaton said. He added, "They're for 100 percent sharia law, 100 percent, and that's the big problem. You use the phrase 'radical Islam.' Well, they're not just 'radical.' They want to impose sharia law." Van Susteren agreed, "They're not just 'radical.' They're trying to impose sharia law," she said. "Isn't that more honest?" Van Susteren continued, "I don't want to get in political issues, but the way we speak about this, it's like we are surrendering. You need to be honest about it." The Fox News host echoed 79a2804d6b
