I am trying to solve the following problem: Given a directed graph $G(V,E)$, and a number of ordered pairs $(i,j)\in E$, I want to be able to calculate the minimum spanning tree of this graph, whose weight is the distance between vertex i and vertex j. In the worst case, I have to do this in $O(|V|^2)$ time and $O(|E|)$ space. I have made some progress with the problem, and have the following working solution. I have a graph $G=(V,E)$ with n vertices, and m edges. We can assume w.l.o.g. that $n\leq m$. We need to find a tree T of G such that T contains all the vertices of G, and there is no other tree T' with weight $\min_{v,w\in V} d(v,w)$ less than T. We can store G in a data structure with $O(n)$ space. To do this, we find a spanning tree of G in $O(n^2)$ time and $O(n)$ space. We process edges in $O(m)$ time, and store the tree T' in another data structure with $O(m)$ space. We then use a merge sort to partition the remaining edges into buckets. If an edge has a weight less than the weight of T, then it is placed in the leftmost bucket, which can be done in $O(m/2)$ time. We then merge the edges in each bucket, and the results are stored in a new data structure with $O(m)$ space. After this, we construct T as follows. For each bucket, we add the vertex of T that is closest to the leftmost vertex in the bucket. This requires $O(m)$ time and $O(1)$ space. If we had n vertices, then we would need $O(m)$ time and $O(m)$ space to construct T, but we only have $n\leq m$, so we can save space by making this process $O(m/n)$. My question is:
